Everybody loves rankings of the companies in their industry – especially if their company's included. Lindsay Gale reports on this year's ranking of the top one hundred demolition contractors from around the world

It is all change for the 2006 d&ri100 listing. Of the 100 companies qualifying for the d&ri100, 25 feature on the list for the first time, with the highest placed of these, LVI Services Inc, coming in at number 8. The top five has also changed order, with Penhall International taking the top slot away from Manafort Brothers, which is pushed into third place as a result of Brandenburg being one of the few companies to retain its 2005 place at number 2.

The total combined turnover of the 2006 d&ri100 companies >14 is US$2,701 million, up some US$325 million on the same figure last year. However, I feel it would be inappropriate to use this comparison to draw conclusions about the state of the industry because of the considerable number of new entrants to the list.

The top 50 contractors between them accounted for US$2,074 million, 78% of the total d&ri100 turnover. The top 25 accounted for US$1,494, or just over 55%.

Perhaps of more note is that of the 75 companies that were listed last year, 43 (58%) indicated growth, of varying degrees, in their turnover over the previous year, while only 28 (37%) showed a decline in turnover. This appears to suggest that the industry has generally been experiencing a degree of growth.

Where the 25 companies that no longer appear in the list are concerned, there are a number of reasons for this. The most common, unfortunately, is that they failed to respond to our repeated information requests and we were unable to obtain relevant financial information to update their data. There are a very few who's performance dipped substantially on their 2004 results, sufficient to remove them from the list, but generally these were companies towards the bottom of the d&ri100.

As was the case in 2005, the top half of the list is dominated by North American companies. The top five is all-US, with a total turnover of US$703 million (24% of the total d&ri100 turnover of US$2,732). Overall, 42 North American contractors have made it onto the list, with a combined turnover of US$1,571.6 million (57.5% of the d&ri100 total) and an average turnover of US$ 37.4 million (almost twice the corresponding figure for their European counterparts). Three of these are Canadian, leaving 39 US contractors (two up from last year). Twenty-five of these US players are in the top 50 of the list, leaving just 14 in the bottom half.

The best performing Canadian contractor was Murray Demolition

Corp, at number 12, although it is closely followed by new entry Priestly Demolition at number 15, with a difference of US$6 million between the two.

The first non-North American entry in the list is the UK's Cuddy Group, with a reported turnover of US$89.4 million, and then follows a whole raft of European contractors. Overall, 52 European contractors made the listing, and in turn accounted for US$1,082.4 million, or 39.6%, of the total. This confirms the often-stated view that European contractors are generally smaller, with the overall average turnover standing at US$20.8 million.

By a process of elimination, that leaves just nine contractors on the list from outside these two geographical areas, accounting for the final US$88 million. This certainly suggests that there are many more out there that have failed to submit data for their activities – a matter we will attempt to address for next year's d&ri100 listing.

Once again, I would like to thank all those who supplied information for this year's d&ri100 and I would also like to encourage those who did not do so to submit data for next year.

sourcing the data:

This year D&Ri conducted the largest ever effort to contact as many demolition contractors around the world as possible, using both the full circulation of the magazine (digital and printed subscriptions) and a variety of other sources. I would like to thank all who responded.

If you did not respond, I would like to encourage you to do so next year. The greater the response, the more authoritative the d&ri100 listing will be.

Where a company is included, the data relating to 2005 financial performance was either supplied the company itself or sourced through a variety of financial data resources.

D&Ri has endeavoured to ensure the accuracy of the information supplied by checks carried out on selected responses using these independent sources but, nevertheless, can accept no responsibility for any errors or omissions that may have occurred.

As part of the information gathering exercise, D&Ri included an on-line questionnaire about individual company data related to planned future expenditure and other industry related data. This will be collated in time for the next issue and a general analysis of the responses will be included in the May-June issue of D&Ri. d&ri
